

Moses and the fate of the INTJ

An intuitive type analysis

Adrian Daniel Botnariu Follow

Jun 17 · 6 min read

Twitter LinkedIn Facebook Medium

Moses is known to be a great military strategist and over time developed an efficient way of handling people, by catering to their needs through spectacle, tradition and physical objects. He always defended his own Fi values against any outside influence and mastered his extraverted functions Te and Se towards the end of his life. He followed his Ni masterplan to claim the land of Canaan first for himself and second for his people, which was born from the fact that, as an Israelite, he was blocked from attaining higher positions within the Egyptian royalty. Tragically, he never saw his plan come to fruition, as he died when setting eyes on the promised land. Thus is the fate of the INTJ. We are the architects of new plateaus that others will inhabit.

DISCLAIMER: I am writing this as someone who does not believe in the mythological aspects of the judeo-christian tradition as a realistic portrait of what actually happened, but much more as an attempt to intuitively describe the mysterious workings of the universe in order to persuade the non-intuitive portion of the population of a common goal. I will, at many points, part from scripture and go full Ni-mode, treating Moses as a normal human being and filling in the plot holes, left open by the word. Please bear with me.

From rags to riches

Moses was born in a jewish population boom. Yes that's right, he was the original boomer. Now instead of relying on the Vietnam war in order to decimate the male population, the Pharaoh took matters in his own hands and, like Anakin, killed many younglings out of fear that they might challenge the empire's dominance in the long run. Moses was lucky enough to have a caring mother who, very apt in the sensory, predicted the flow of the Nile and presented her son in a basket to the Pharaoh's daughter, who took the baby in and raised him as her own.

Unlike the other Israelites, Moses grew up with access to higher education and a clear anti-israel persuasion. To the Egyptians, the Israelites were below them and born to be slaves, a sentiment that is found in many slave holding civilizations throughout history, as presented by Plato himself, one of the leading figures that our western moral understanding was fashioned after.

... and back to rags again

In true Ni-Te fashion, as a young man, Moses stuck to tradition and played the hierarchy game within Egyptian royalty. When he found out that he was in fact of Israeli origins, he finally understood that his people were not below the Egyptians, but merely lacked the means for higher education due to their slave status. His Fi developed and his own value system started deviating from the Pharaoh's rhetoric. As scripture has it, Moses fell into [Se] rage, when he saw injustice happen, which resulted in him even killing an Egyptian man. After escaping to Midian, he met his first wife at a well. But instead of approaching her directly, he watched her from afar and when some guys drove her and her sisters away, he stepped in and defended her. This very awkward approach is another clear indication of Se-Inferior. But it worked...

A new master plan

At the time, the 12 tribes of Israel were deeply divided even among themselves. According to scripture, they departed from the one god of their ancestors and started worshipping a vast array of gods, ghosts and other mythical creatures, internally quarreling about the legitimacy of each one. Moses approached his original family, namely Miriam and Aaron, who belonged to the Tribe of Levi and together they hatched a plan, how to unite the people and free them from slavery. Moses did the planning, while Aaron and Miriam took care of the marketing. He basically formed a tight-knit group around himself to compensate for his introversion and help him achieve his Ni goals.

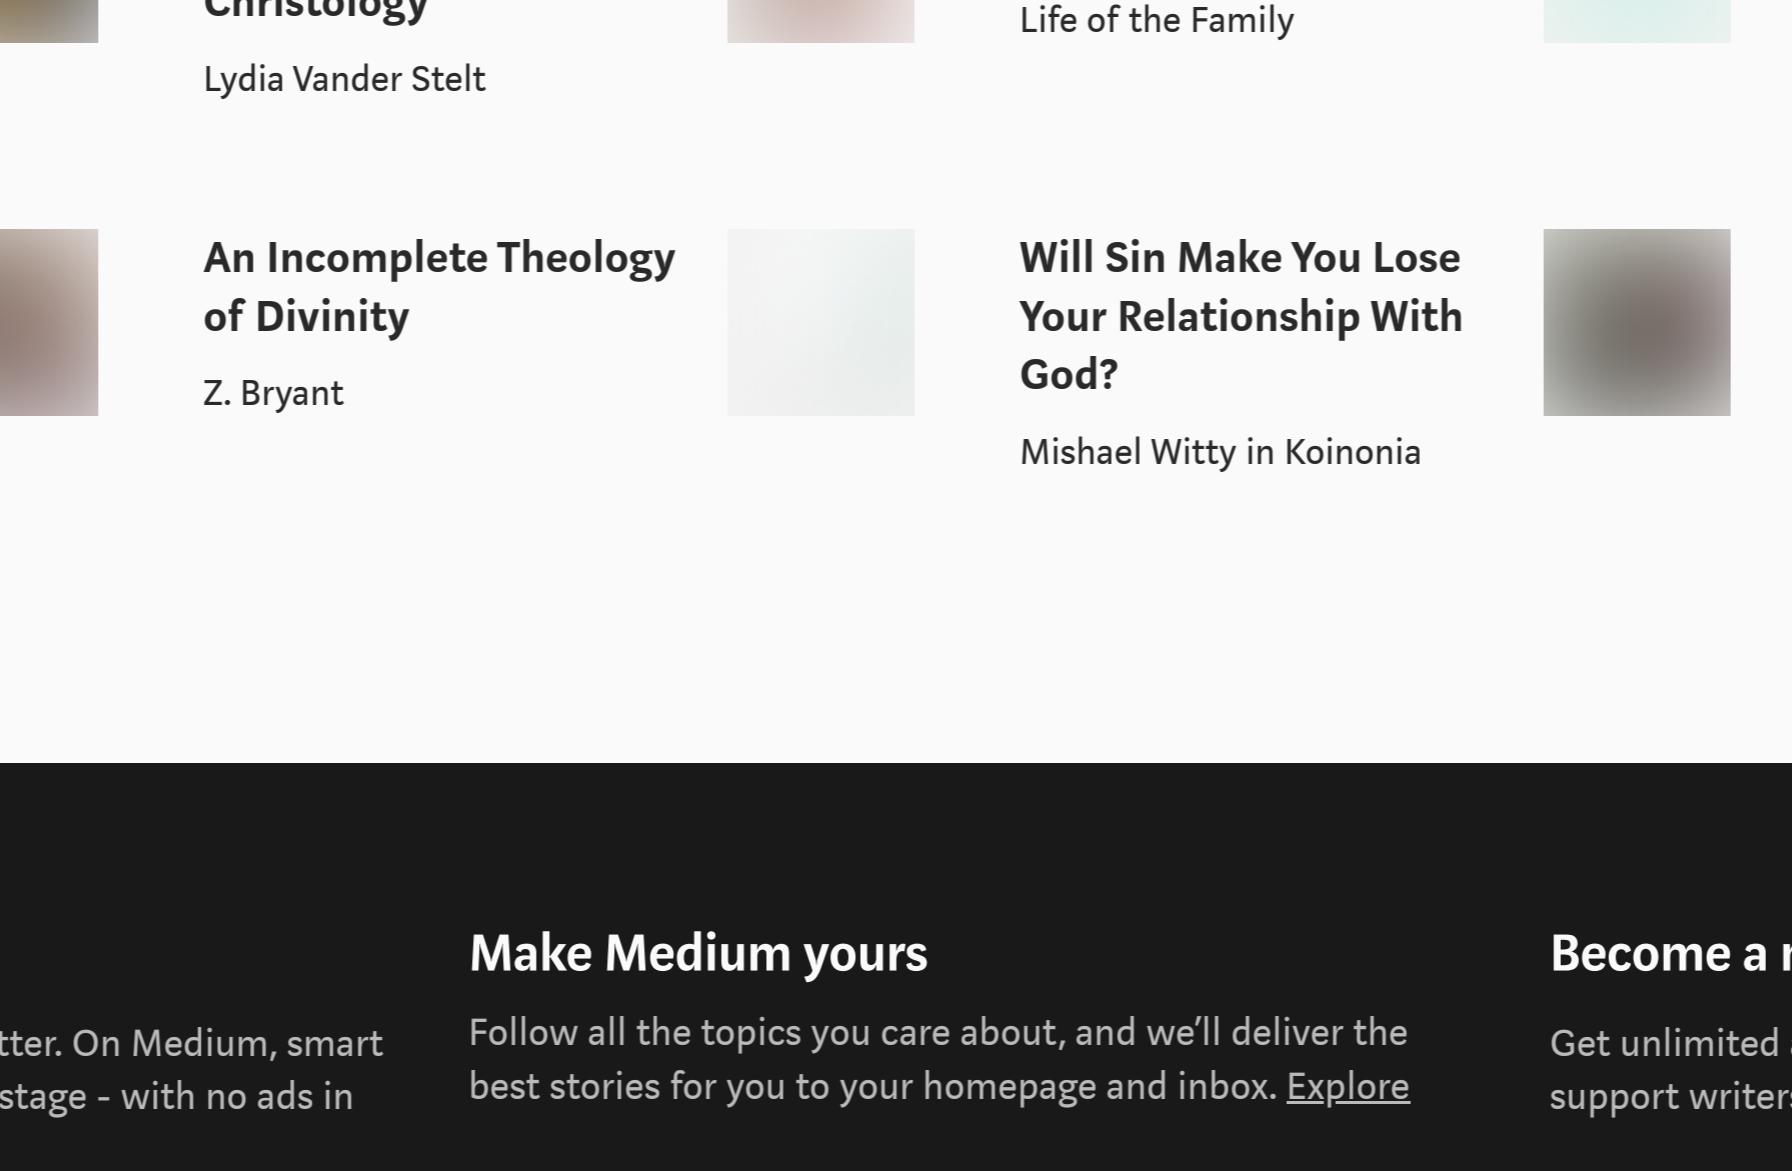

I will skip over the seven plagues, because it is very difficult to know what actually happened, but it seems like a masterplan that had the Pharaoh fooled, who upon understanding his mistake, sent his chariots after the Israelites.

The creation and upholding of the one true god

We will say that Moses created Yahweh in order to unite the tribes and have them follow his lead. We will further say that it was himself, not god who wrote the ten commandments. According to scripture, on the way to Canaan, Moses handled all disputes among the Israelites himself. According to intuition, he couldn't deal with all that emotional and sensory mayhem anymore that kept him from delving into his Ni and planning his next moves. So he set up camp at mount Sinai where he went into the mountains to come up with a set of rules, a system so to speak, to simplify jurisdiction. He needed to be alone and delve into his process unhinged to really nail it and trusted his people to respect his process. But after a couple of days, the tribes, except the Levites of course, were back to worshipping idols.

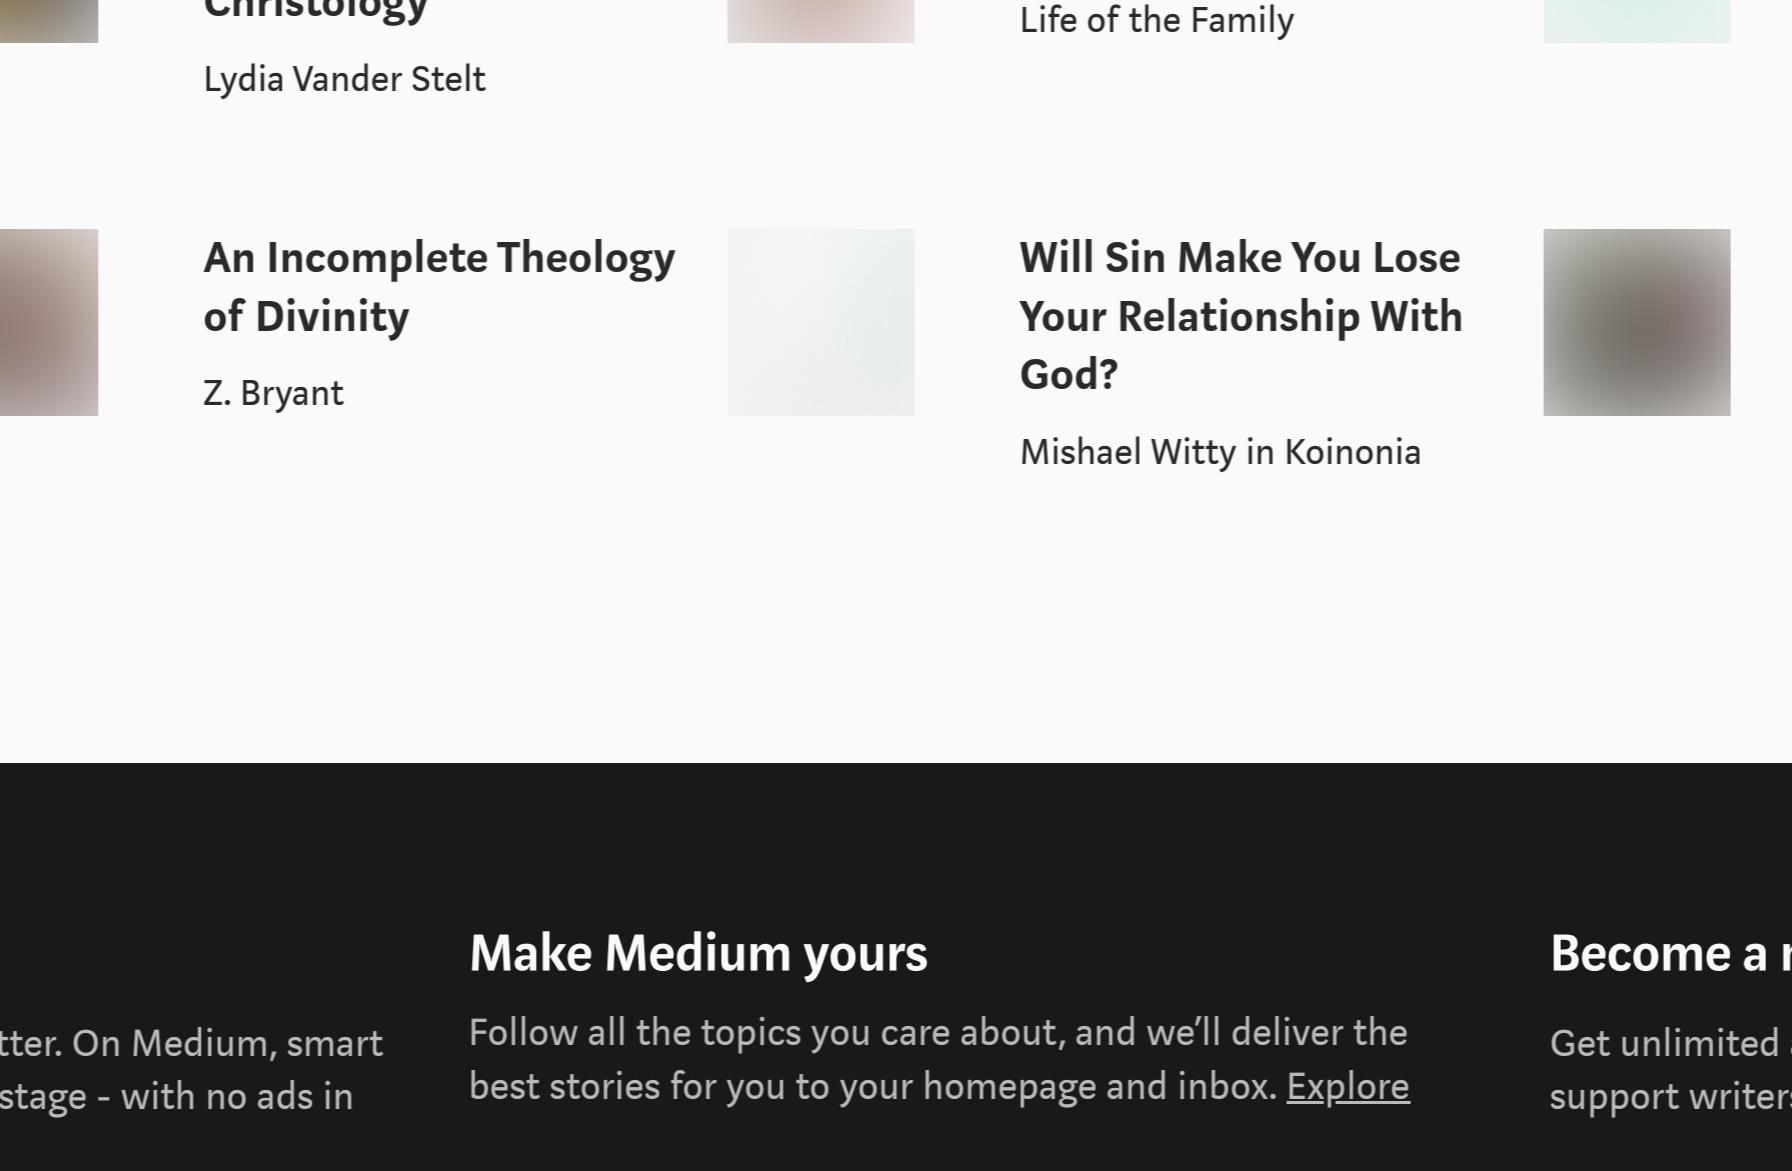

Confronted with this lack of loyalty, Moses once again went into Se-Rage mode, smashing his stone plates containing the laws and having the Levites kill more than 11.000 people.

Doing what works for others to reach his own final goal

Now that martial law was proclaimed, Moses went back into the mountains and did some soul searching. According to intuition, Moses' first draft was just way too complicated and not easily understood, which is why the people went back to their idols. It is said that the first version could only fit on three plates, but maybe that is in itself just a way of saying that it was rather convoluted. While he didn't want to have his nation worship a worldly image of a god, he understood that the sensory portion of the population needs something physical to hold on to. So he rewrote his laws, reducing them from three to two plates. Ten laws in total. He then had a covenant built, in which the laws were to be carried at the front of the convoy. At every rest, the tent of the covenant was put up, where the Levites would practice sacrifices and put up a great show for the believers.

According to scripture, god said he doesn't want a temple erected in his name. According to intuition that was a great slide of hands by Moses in order to keep the Israelites moving to Canaan, the promised land. This tradition was only ended by David, who began construction on the temple in Jerusalem and it was finished by his son King Solomon.

More From Medium

Ten Questions That a Theist Can't Answer

Barry Lyons

Children's Books, Whiteness, and Christology

Lydia Vander Stelt

These 3 Choices Rescued Our Sinking Marriage

Life of the Family

The Chrysalis and the Butterfly: A New Way to Think About Spirituality and Religion

Carl McColman

Medicare for All is a Christian Policy

Nathan George

An Incomplete Theology of Divinity

Z. Bryant

Will Sin Make You Lose Your Relationship With God?

Mishael Witty in Koinonia

People Will Hold God's Plan Against You, Especially When They've Given You Something

Nicholas Landers in An Injustice!

Welcome to a place where words matter. On Medium, smart voices and original ideas take center stage — with no ads or sign-in. Watch

Follow all the topics you care about, and we'll deliver the best stories for you to your homepage and inbox. Explore

Get unlimited access to the best stories on Medium — and support writers while you're at it. Just $5/month. Upgrade